New Historical Marker

Community leaders, representatives from Pittsylvania County, the Pittsylvania County Historical Society, and Circuit Court Presiding Judge Stacy Moreau unveil a new historical marker for the Pittsylvania Courthouse. The marker highlights the 1880 U.S. Supreme Court Case Ex Parte Virginia, a case that reinforced the 14th amendment and authorized Congress to require States to not exclude black people from juries. The case started when a Pittsylvania County judge refused to allow black men on juries, a direct violation of the federal Civil Rights Act of 1875.

Meet the Interns

Pittsylvania County's summer interns started work this week and are already learning lots and doing good work for Pittsylvania County. We will be highlighting some of the interns that are working across County government here over the next several weeks.

Cora Wilson, Community Development

Cora, who was the Pittsylvania County Community Development Intern last summer, decided to take the position again because it is oriented towards her career , and she loves enjoyed working with her coworkers. This summer, she has been going out to sites and inspecting them with the Deputy Director of Community Development, as well as scanning permits. She has learned more about the zoning ordinance and how to work the GIS website.

County Natives Doing Big Things

NASA James Webb Telescope Program Director

At this point you have probably seen one of the five pictures taken by NASA's James Webb Space Telescope. But you may not have known that the man behind the success is a Danville native who graduated Dan River High School.

Before the school district integrated in 1970, he attended three elementary schools in the County: Southside, Mount Hermon, and Glenwood. He attended Blairs Junior High School before going to Dan River High School in the ninth grade. Robinson was the ninth of eleven children born to a family of sharecroppers, and he was the only one to pursue a STEM-related field.
